Bruce Fuerbringer introduced and explained the Hazardous Materials Commodity Flow Study and focused on the results from Chippewa County. The purpose for the study is to provide a knowledge basis for a county's risk assessment and emergency planning processes specific to transportation-related hazardous materials release.

The following recommendations were created to assist in the planning for dealing with a hazardous materials release, and subsequent emergency response to a transportation accident.

1. Review overall preparedness of the County emergency management and emergency response agencies to mitigate a transportation incident involving hazardous materials.
2. Schedule a minimum of annual hazardous materials response training.
3. Inventory response equipment related to a hazardous materials incident.

Chemicals from observation point in Chippewa County included:

- Elevated Temperature Liquid
- Nitrogen
- LP
- Gasoline
- Nitrogen, Cryogenic
- HOT, N.O.S.

C. Hazardous Materials Events –John Bowe

John mentioned the sulfuric acid tanker rollover in Stanley. The Type 3 team responded. The outer liner of the tank had been pierced but the inner tank was not damaged. They stayed on scene until the tanker was safely righted.

John B. brought up the Emergency Management vacancy. He stated an immediate need to fill the position and asked where it was in the process. Marcy stated that they are in the third posting and have several possible candidates. More will be known in the near future. John B. mentioned that this is starting the fourth month without a Director. He suggested that an interim Director be hired and then stay with the new Director until he/she is onboard and comfortable with the Wisconsin Emergency Management system. More help is needed and if Marcy could add hours it would be helpful.

John Bowe made a motion which was seconded by Paul "Chip" Eckardt to have John Anderson, as Chair of the LEPC send a letter to the County Board Chair, Dean Gullickson, addressing the vacant position, requesting a six-month interim Director. Motion passed.
